

Aaron Drucker, MD ScM FRCPC, is a dermatologist and clinician scientist at Women's College Hospital and the University of Toronto in Toronto, Canada. He completed his dermatology training at the University of Toronto before undertaking a research fellowship at Brown University in Providence, RI, USA. His focus is on the epidemiology and burden of disease of AD and on evidence-based dermatology. He uses large datasets to answer important research questions, including those related to the comorbidities of and risk factors for AD.